

Undertaking a Postgraduate research degree at Dundalk Institute of Technology can be a rewarding experience both in terms of your professional and personal development. It can give you that cutting edge that is required in the competitive world.

The number of postgraduate researchers undertaking a PhD or Research Masters programme of study within the Institute has risen dramatically in recent years. The aim of the Research and Postgraduate Studies Office is to provide help and information to new and existing postgraduate students by research. When you enrol as a postgraduate research student within the Institute not only will you be gaining specific expertise in your research area but also you will be offered a range of training initiatives such as generic skills workshops and online tutorials.
